Keep this medicine in the house. Hon. C. Edwards Lester, late U. S. Consul to Italy, and author of various popular works, writes:—

"With all sorts of exposure, in all sorts of climates, I have never, to this day, had any cold nor any affection of the throat or lungs which did not yield to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral within 24 hours. Of course I have never allowed myself to be without this remedy in all my voyages and travels. Under my own observation, it has given relief to a vast number of persons; while in acure cases of pulmonary inflammation, such as croup and diphtheria in children, life has been preserved through its effects. I recommend its use in light and frequent doses, Properly administered, in accordance with your directions, it is a priceless blessing in any house."

MRS. PARTINGTON.

Her Perplexities, Predicaments and Predictions Before and After Her Return.

BY B. P. SHILLABER. (Copyrighted. All rights reserved.)

CHAPTER VII. Although Mrs. Partington was in search of health, employment to her was a necessity, and she early busied herself with affairs at the cottage, but not in an obtrusive way. Priding herself on her cookery, she took pleasure in imparting what she knew of the gentle art, and found ready learners. New England nodes were a novelty, and the dishes she produced, won her a wide fame. The fragrance of her cookery vied with the orange blossoms, the little darkies lay in the sun to inhale the odors from the kitchen in the yard, and passers by, taking a long breath, would wonder what taking a long breath, would wonder what new element had been added to the tropical odors. She had no strict formula in preparing her dishes, but a "thing" of this and a "thing" of that and "thing" of t'other, and a seasoning according to judgment, comprised the whole of her vocabulary of the cuisine, but she was infallible in her department. Her atti-tude in the realm of doughnuts was sub-lime.

Rescue for both parties came, and the insects were expelled, but the spectacle that both presented was a sight to be seen, not described, and the curtain drops here, leaving Mrs. Partington and Ike to their lotions and emollients, days intervening before the injuries were renaired. fallible in ... ade in the realm of doug....

There were other things besides those previously mentioned, which appeared at the table occasionally, in the form of chickens, a pig now and the, white fish from the river, and other things, but the staple of plantain and salt fish never swerved from its integrity.

Among the dishes introduced by Mrs. Partington was a great favorite, skill in preparation was a great favorite, skill in preparation was a great favorite, skill in preparation.

There's not a liniment by which I could be idemnified, and the nose is perfectly underly the standard of the event nouncer, who got a hint of the event nouncer.

On one occasion there came up from he kitchen a smoking pie, the crust prown and crisp, didusing an odor most provoking to appetite. "I declare," said Mrs. Partington, "that provoking to appetite.

"I declare," said Mrs. Partington, "that is very flagrant, and I wouldn't know that it was not promulgated by myself, it is certainly a very credible thing."

At the table there was much praise if or the pic, and Mrs. Partington was accorded the honors for its introduction.

"You deserve the credit of an original addiscovery," said Mr. Trimble, as he held his plate for another quarter section.

"Well, I don't know," she replied, "it is certainly very reprehensible, but I did not eventuate it. It came down to me from a very remote antipathy."

When near the close of the meal she was observed to be turning over a bone, upon her plate, with a dubious expression upon her face. It was a strange object, the bone with three projections, like the shade rest of an argand lamp.

"What do you see?" said Mrs. Halsford, looking at her daughter and smilling.

Ike was intent upon his meal, and

Ike was intent upon his meal, and

Ike was intent upon his meal, and took no notice.

"Well," said she, "I have been used all my life to the anathema of poultry, but such a bone as this I have never before extemporized."

"My dear Mrs. Partington," said Mr. Trimble. "After you have concluded your dinner, I will show you the feathers."

your dinner, I will show you the feathers."

The meat was very white and sweet and the dame greatly enjoyed it, but that bone was a mystery that she could not fathom. A three-pronged bone, she said, was a parallax to her.

After the repast she went out with Mr. Trimble to review the remains of the atrange fowl, and there, nailed to a board was the skin of an immense Iguana, looking like;an alligator with arms and legs outspread, the claws extending, with a row of long quills down its back. "Well, well," said she, smiling, "this beats eating frogs' hind legs, but never did I think that I should have made so good a dinner form an allegation."

"It does look like an alligator," said Mr. Trimble, "of which Mr. Smith said that it had an amiable expression when it smiled; and the smile of this fellow just have been in the quality of the

"If I had seen it subsequently," said

"If I had seen it subsequently," said Mrs. Partington, "it might have revolutionized my stomach, but it is fallacious to recall the past, and most assuringly it tasted good, and I shouldn't be objectionable to another."

This was an experience of which she had many others, and time flew by on rapid wings. Ike, on the whole, had a hard time of it, with not another white boy in town, but he found refuge at the store below, and made himself as useful as the conditions allowed. Once when sent with a message, and having to wait the movements of a lumping servant, he amused himself by penceling a mustache on the lip of a Venus of Milo that stood in the vestibule, much to the delight of the servant who had to wash it off.

There was a splendid mango tree, loaded with fruit, on the low ground near the cottage and Ike had a longing for some of the tempting product. Like the product of the orange tree next door the fruit remained ungathered and the temptiation for a raid was too strong to be resisted. The reporter of the Equatorial Announcer, who got a hint of the event called to ascertain the facts, and published a column and a half about it, mostly imaginary, tenderly touching Mrs. Partington's nose, avering that the hospitality of the colony was endangered by the attack of this member. Even Sir John Tickler the governor, jealons for the colony's reputation and fearing the event might endanger the peaceful relations existing between the two countries, sent her a sympathetic letter which she kent her a sympathetic letter which she kept ill her dging day. This latter remark, italicized in the A Question.

This latter remark, italicized in the preceding paragraph, must be ruled out, because another with all the incidents of his work in his head crowding impetuously to get out, may inadvertently allow some of the most distant to escape before their time. The possibility of the demise of Mrs. Partington should not be entertained by the reader for a minute, but nous acrrous.

Slow for Ike was the process of cure, his face mulched with plantain leaves, but he found amusement in rummaging over some old books, long undisturbed, in which he found many funny old pictures which pleased him. He was turn, ing over the pages one day when a strange looking insect or reptile dropped upon the floor and was making off as fast as it could, when he tried to stop it. It was a curious looking thing, with a long, jointed tail, about an inci in length, its color like the paper it had escaped from. Mrs. Partington celebrated her convalescence by frying a large batch of her grand doughnuts and sending a goodly dish of them to the Government House, with her compliments to Governor Sir John Tickler, who returned his thanks with the cumply dish, and thus assurance was given that the conditions of peace would be preserved, unless the politicians should take Mrs. Partington's nose and stake a handle of it, "And the years glide by."
